Smithsonian Mobile Exhibit Explores the Human–Animal Bond

Release Date:
Friday, August 16, 2013 12:00 am EDT

Terms:
Animal Connections, AVMA, Companion Animals, Smithsonian, Veterinarians, Events, Education, Corporate Partnerships, People, Farm Animals

Dateline City:
NEWARK, N.J. AUGUST 16, 2013

“Animal Connections” Rolls in to Newark’s Prudential Center August 19-21 and Morristown’s Fosterfields September 8

NEWARK, N.J. August 16, 2013 — From the cows that provide the milk for a bowl of cereal to the deer nibbling on a shrub in the park, from sea lions working with their trainers at the zoo to puppies chasing balls in the yard, the connections humans have with animals are vast. This special relationship is explored in a new mobile exhibition from the Smithsonian.

“Animal Connections: Our Journey Together,” a custom-built exhibition housed on an 18-wheel truck that expands into 1,000 square feet of space, will be at the Prudential Center in Newark August 19 through August 21, and at the 1920s Country Fair and Harvest Festival at Fosterfields Living Historical Farm in Morristown on September 8. The exhibition is an introduction to the world of veterinary medicine and was developed to inspire future generations of veterinary professionals. This free exhibition explores the shared responsibility for animals’ health and well-being and was created by the Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Service (SITES) to mark the 150th anniversary of the American Veterinary Medical Association (AVMA). The exhibition is made possible through the support of Zoetis, Inc., a company that discovers, develops and manufactures veterinary vaccines and medicines.

“The affection that people everywhere have for animals sparked our enthusiasm for an exhibit about veterinary medicine that would inspire lively conversations about the human–animal bond,” said Anna R. Cohn, director of SITES.

“Animal Connections” will be open to the public at the Prudential Center on August 19 from 10:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m. and August 20-21 from 10:00 a.m. – 6:00 p.m. On September 8, the exhibition will make an appearance at the 1920s County Fair and Harvest Festival at Fosterfields Living Historical Farm from 12:00 p.m. – 5:00 p.m. For the safety of animals and people, visitors are asked not to bring pets.

“Of the more than 74 million American households that include pets, nearly two-thirds consider their pets family members,” said Dr. Doug Aspros, president of the AVMA. “The deep connection Americans have with animals and the pivotal role veterinarians play in our relationships with all animals are so wonderful and worthy of celebration on our 150th anniversary.”

Divided into five sections, the exhibition focuses on animals in the home, on the farm, at the zoo, in the wild and at the veterinary clinic. Visitors are offered a variety of ways to learn through informative displays, dynamic videos and interactive experiences. In the home section, visitors will learn how to select the right pet and the possible dangers to pets, such as household items like plants and holiday decorations and giving them food prepared for family members. A display in the farm section highlights the mobile clinics that large-animal veterinarians stock with a variety of tools — from dental speculums to cow magnets — to ensure they are prepared for any procedure. A virtual clinic at the center of the exhibition provides visitors the opportunity to be the veterinarian. Through touch screens, they can examine and diagnose what ails their virtual patients — a dog, a piglet and a cheetah.

“At Zoetis, we work every day to better understand and address the real-world challenges faced by those who raise and care for animals,” said Clint Lewis, executive vice president and president of the U.S. business at Zoetis. “As part of our commitment to veterinarians, we are proud to join with the Smithsonian and the AVMA in supporting ‘Animal Connections’ as a means to inspire young people to pursue careers in veterinary medicine and its allied professions.”

In addition to exploring the expert care that zoo animals receive, the exhibition features enrichment objects used at the Smithsonian’s National Zoo to encourage natural behaviors in animals. For example, large plastic balls provided to tigers to put their hunting instincts to work and the zebras’ special feeders replicate grazing in the wild. Videos will showcase that even suburban areas have a great diversity of wildlife — from the squirrels trying to break into a birdfeeder to a bear lounging in a hammock.

Visitors to “Animal Connections” can continue the learning experience online at animalconnections.com.

About Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Service (SITES)

SITES has been sharing the wealth of Smithsonian collections and research programs with millions of people outside Washington, D.C., for 60 years. SITES connects Americans to their shared cultural heritage through a wide range of exhibitions about art, science and history, which are shown wherever people live, work and play.
About American Veterinary Medical Association (AVMA)

The AVMA, established in 1863, is a not-for-profit association representing more than 84,000 veterinarians working in private and corporate practice, government, industry, academia and uniformed services. The mission of the association is to improve animal and human health and advance the veterinary medical profession.

About Zoetis

Zoetis (zō-EH-tis) is a leading animal health company dedicated to supporting customers and businesses focused on raising and caring for livestock and companion animals. Building on a 60-year history as the animal health business of Pfizer, Zoetis discovers, develops, manufactures and markets veterinary vaccines and medicines, complemented by diagnostic products and genetic tests.

# #

Media Contact:
Jennifer Schommer
(202) 633-3121
schommerj@sj.edu

Media website: http://newsdesk.si.edu

Language: English